

Spirit Digital

Spirit Digital is a creative agency that supports business design through digital, print, marketing and events.

Co-founded by former Australia Rugby Union player Glen Ella, Spirit Digital is majority Indigenous owned and is registered with Supply Nation.

On the Rozelle Interchange project, we work closely with Spirit Digital to print signage, brochures and banners that are used within our site and externally in the public realm. Jason and his team are flexible, efficient and always available to take a phone call and help with any of the large number of print requirements across the project.

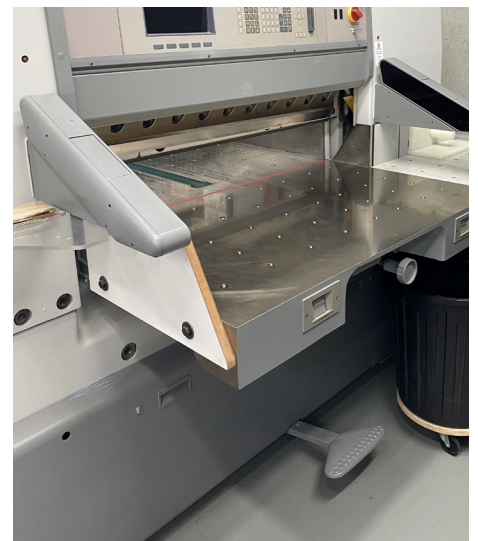

In line with their commitment to customer service and hands-on approach, the team have delivered essential signage for the project on impressively tight deadlines. The next time you order last minute signage through the Communications team, you probably have Spirit Digital to thank for the printing and delivery.

Sales Manager at Spirit Digital, Jason James, said Reconciliation begins with supporting younger generations through education.

“Spirit Agency is committed to giving back to the Indigenous community through our graphic design internships and career development programs,” Jason said.

“At Spirit, we believe reconciliation is a journey, a process of working in unity to overcome the division and inequality between Indigenous and non-Indigenous Australians. It’s a “bottom-up” process that occurs one person at a time, but that also requires support from official institutions and leading corporates.”
